In 1557, Du Bellay returned to France. He was disillusioned with the French court and the political and religious turmoil that was gripping the country. He wrote Les Regrets as a way to express his feelings of exile and longing for home.

Les Regrets is divided into three parts. The first part, "Les Regrets de Rome," consists of poems that describe Du Bellay's experiences in Italy. He writes about the beauty of the Italian countryside, the grandeur of Rome, and the warmth of the Italian people. However, he also expresses his longing for France and his friends and family.

The second part, "Les Regrets de France," consists of poems that describe Du Bellay's return to France. He writes about the joy of seeing his homeland again, but he also expresses his disappointment with the political and religious situation in the country.

The third part, "Les Regrets de la vie," consists of poems that reflect on the nature of life and death. Du Bellay writes about the brevity of life, the inevitability of death, and the importance of living each day to the fullest.

Les Regrets is a powerful and moving meditation on the human experience of exile and the longing for home. Through vivid imagery and lyrical language, Du Bellay captures the pain of separation, the disorientation of living in a foreign land, and the bittersweet memories of his homeland. This classic work of French literature offers a timeless meditation on the human condition and the enduring power of memory.
