Carew was born in Gatun, Panama, in 1945. He grew up playing baseball in the streets, and by the time he was a teenager, he was one of the best players in the country. In 1964, Carew signed a contract with the Minnesota Twins, and he made his major league debut in 1967. Carew quickly became one of the best hitters in the league, and he was a key member of the Twins' World Series championship team in 1987.

In 1979, Carew was traded to the California Angels, and he played for the Angels for the next five seasons. Carew continued to be one of the best hitters in the league, and he helped the Angels win the American League West division title in 1982. Carew retired from baseball in 1985, and he was inducted into the Baseball Hall of Fame in 1991.

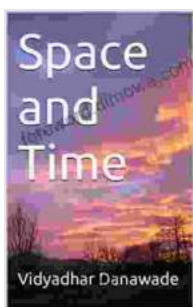

Carew's autobiography is more than just a baseball story. It is also a story about overcoming adversity. Carew grew up in poverty, and he had to overcome many obstacles to achieve his dream of playing in the major leagues. Carew's story is an inspiration to anyone who has ever faced adversity.

In Space and Time, Carew reflects on his life and career, and he offers his insights on the game of baseball and on life in general. Carew is a wise and thoughtful man, and his book is full of valuable lessons. Space and Time is a must-read for any baseball fan, and it is also a great book for anyone who is interested in overcoming adversity.
