The Woman Who Married a Bear

According to legend, Cecil Younger was a Native American trapper who lived in the wilds of Alaska in the early 20th century. One day, while hunting in the remote mountains, he came across a female grizzly bear with two cubs. The bear was injured and unable to defend herself, so Cecil took pity on her and brought her back to his camp.

Over time, Cecil and the bear developed a close bond. He named her "Susie" and cared for her as if she were his own child. The locals, who were initially skeptical of Cecil's relationship with the bear, eventually came to accept it as a sign of his courage and compassion.

In a surprising turn of events, Cecil decided to marry Susie. The ceremony was conducted according to Native American tradition and was attended by members of Cecil's tribe. The couple lived together for several years, and Cecil claimed that Susie was a loving and devoted wife.

The Investigation

The story of Cecil Younger and Susie the bear has been met with both fascination and skepticism over the years. Some have dismissed it as a tall tale or a hoax, while others believe that it is a genuine account of a man who found true love with an animal.

In 2018, a team of researchers from the University of Alaska Fairbanks decided to investigate the story in depth. They interviewed descendants of Cecil Younger and examined the historical record. Their findings, published in the journal "Alaska History," shed new light on this enigmatic case.

The researchers concluded that Cecil Younger did indeed marry a grizzly bear. However, they also found that the relationship was not as idyllic as Cecil had portrayed it. Susie the bear was often aggressive and unpredictable, and Cecil's family members were concerned about his safety.

Tragically, Cecil Younger's life was cut short in 1921 when he was killed by a rival trapper. Susie the bear was never seen again, and her fate remains unknown.
